Specialization in Gerontology Management

OVERVIEW

As a large portion of our population ages, demand for healthcare managers to coordinate, plan and direct senior health services is expected to grow.¹ AIU's Bachelor of Healthcare Management is designed for those interested in healthcare organizations. The specialization in Gerontology Management helps students prepare to manage healthcare with a focus on senior services such as long-term care, short-term care, home care, rehabilitation, nursing care, community-based services and chronic care.

CURRICULUM INCLUDES

In this specialized curriculum, students can learn about the U.S. healthcare system including its structure, operations, regulations and management with a focus on services for the aging population. This specialization provides students with an opportunity to study healthcare directly across many disciplines in order to help students prepare for a career in healthcare management. For example:

Case Management for Gerontology: students focus on the social aspects of aging including financial planning, housing, legal concerns, health issues, and family/spousal relationships. Life altering conditions which shift life styles, independence and dependence are also discussed along with separation of life-long partners and its social and physiological implications.

Sociology and Aging: students receive an introduction to the psychological aging process. Stages of aging, disorders in the aging process along with perceptual, cognitive personality and interpersonal social human traits are considered.

Counseling for Gerontology: students explore the various medical, mental and physical issues related to aging along with social and financial issues that may evolve with an aging population. Counseling theories and methods are discussed along with a discussion of various counseling services offered.
